1. Every year since 1945 the East Zone has experienced difficulties in finding storage space for the incoming grain harvest. The reason is to be found in the Communist practice of subdividing large estates with spacious buildings into small farms and tearing down the large buildings in the process. In addition, the Soviet system of compulsory deliveries within the shortest time eliminates small farms as storage areas because the entire harvest is collected at one time by government agencies.
2. In 1952 the authorities have tried, for the first time, to master this situation. Investments were included in the Five-Year Plan for the erection of 145 grain depots, each with a capacity of 1,600 tons. Plans for the project were worked out in great detail and the necessary building materials were set aside, at least on paper. The target date for the completion of the depots was 30 June 1952. Construction was started according to plan, but materials were soon found to be in short supply and construction came to a standstill. In several instances simplified construction was resorted to but even those buildings have not yet been completed.
3. The following table lists the Kreis and towns where the building sites are located. The 145 grain depots are distributed as follows:

| | |
|--------------------|-----------|
| Land Brandenburg | 48 depots |
| Land Mecklenburg | 73 depots |
| Land Saxony-Anhalt | 18 depots |
| Land Saxony | 4 depots |
